In Autumn 2015, the BBC launched a competition to find Britain's best most entertaining amateur singing group, in a music competition with a difference. Gareth Malone led the search for The Naked Choir, a group who could perform a cappella – using their voices alone and with no instruments accompanying them. After a nationwide competition, The Sons of Pitches were highly acclaimed and popular winners.

Since then, The Sons of Pitches have realised their dream of performing professionally, they have embarked on sell-out national tours and were recently the house band on Sky One's Sing:Ultimate A Cappella

We are delighted to welcome back The Sons of Pitches following last year's very successful concert.
