PUPIL PROGRESS
PASSION, PURPOSE, POSITIVITY = PROGRESS

Revision timetable creating

It's really worth investing time in creating a revision timetable so you can plan out what you are doing and when.

First you need to think about all of the commitments that you need to include;

- Social activities
- Subjects to revise- past papers, key content,
- Family events
- School times, intervention sessions, time in school to revise
- Exercise and nutrition (really important)

Revision Timetables

- The purpose of the next slides are to help you visualise how a revision schedule might look. This is not a set format. You may choose a variety of formats that work better for you and your lifestyle.
- Timetables help us to efficiently organize our time and keep us focused and on track. However, a traditional timetable might not suit the needs of every student. They may have different or more creative ways of organizing their time for revision.
- It is important to not feel bound by a timetable or particular revision technique if it's not working. You need to recognise that not every technique or tip works for every person or subject area in the same way can help to alleviate the stress and pressure students often feel during times of revision.
- If you need any extra printing off ask your form tutor or find/email Mr Homer

Things to consider

- Revision means to 'see again'. You need to plan in time to cover topics/subjects more than once and on different days. By revisiting topics they are more likely to be remembered.
- Vary your revision with different activities to keep it interesting and motivate you.
- Each 'revision' session needs to include an activity where you do something with the information. WRITE STUFF DOWN or talk about it, don't just read.
- As we get closer to exams (Mock or Real) find out when they are so you can plan your time around them. Make sure you have these dates displayed clearly with your revision.
